Topic for Next Issue:

Asia's Export Dependence

Should Asian economies stop pursuing export-led growth strategies of the past and start boosting domestic demand?

Nobel prize-winning economist Paul Krugman recently declared that, "China should produce things for itself instead of acquiring sterile claims on the US."

As export-dependent Asian countries reel from the global economic downturn, is it time for these countries to reorient their economies to boost domestic demand instead of pandering to the US consumer who is no longer the buyer of last resort?
